

An Urgent Call to the People of Our First Global Civilization

Let's speak plainly:

For 36 years we have been living in a new world — a Global Civilization — whether we admit it or not. And this civilization is still young, still forming, still fragile. What we do now will shape the next two or three centuries. What we ignore now will come back to us with full force.

Thanks to the Universal Cosmic Time Scale, we are the first humans in history who can see our future not as guesswork, but as pattern. We know the direction of this new civilization. We know the pressures it will face. And for the first time ever, we have a real chance to influence its outcome.

And there is one fact that should make us all sit up:

This civilization will not tolerate new dictators.

Young people have breathed freedom since birth. Freedom is their native climate. No one who grows up in that climate will ever march behind a tyrant again — not for a flag, not for glory, not for any illusion of power.

But this strength demands a new inner posture from us all. We must tear ourselves away from the old reflex of world domination and grow into the responsibility of world administration. Earth is not a trophy. It is a trust — handed to us by the improbable history of the Solar System itself. And it must be passed forward, intact, to generations we will never meet.

There is no escaping one simple truth:

Every generation has the exact same claim to life, to freedom, and to possibility as we do.

If we leave behind a damaged Earth, they will be right to condemn us. And they will.

Yet there is also a strange mercy in the cosmic timing of today: Young people — you have inherited a rare window.

For several centuries, global warming will not be your greatest enemy. Clean energy is within reach. Healthy nutrition is achievable. The global drinking-water supply is your main challenge, but it is solvable.

But do not mistake this cosmic reprieve for a gift without cost.

There is a price. And it is non-negotiable.

Humanity must rebuild itself on the foundation it has been abandoning: the family. Not as nostalgia. Not as tradition.

As the only antidote to the silent epidemic that is destroying us from within: isolation.

The loneliness that spreads when generations drift apart.

The psychological fragility that comes when people live far from the very networks that once kept them human.

If young people turn back toward their families, their emotional strength will return. Not gradually — immediately. But real families require real closeness: multiple generations living within reach, sharing burdens, sharing time, sharing life.

This transformation will not happen by accident. It must begin in the schools.

We have been pretending that young adults are ready for independence at 18. Unified Science tells us the truth: psychological maturity arrives around 22. The final stage of schooling must prepare them for adulthood, not simply for tests. And this means reform — deep reform.

The second urgent change is harder to swallow, but unavoidable:

We must end anonymity on the Internet. Completely.

Not to control people — to protect them.

No society can survive when billions of anonymous voices can inject poison into the minds of its youngest members. Every post, every upload, every image must be tied to a real person, with real accountability.

If we choose profits over mental health, we will lose an entire generation.

Unified Science reveals that all energetic interactions in the Universe happen quantum by quantum. And human society is no exception. Families, communities, nations, and the global body must form a quantized democratic hierarchy — each level represented by elected voices, each decision-making group kept to about 150 members so that corruption cannot hide.

In groups that size, truth returns. Responsibility becomes visible.

Democracy becomes real again.

And this — all of this — is why I speak urgently, not calmly, about our future.

We stand at the beginning of humanity's First Global Civilization.

It will last, in theory, until the year 3108.

But its quality — its justice, its stability, its humanity — depends entirely on what we do now.

We are the founders.

We do not get a second chance.

And the generations to come will live inside the world we chose — or the world we failed to choose.
